

Single parents or both parents deploying

Planning for children's care

Deployment is a stressful time for all family members, especially children. But when single parents or both parents are deployed, there are extra challenges for families. There are several ways to comfort children during this uncertain time, including planning for their care.

Use the checklist below to help guide you in preparing your children and caregiver for your deployment.

WITH MY CHILDREN'S PRIMARY CAREGIVER, I:

- Review childcare plans.
- Discuss routines and rules to help keep my children on track.
- Develop a plan to ease the transition from parent to caregiver once I leave.
- Make plans for a quick transition if I am placed on alert status.
- Provide important instructions, such as medical information, I.D. card information, command information, school information, transportation plans, mailing addresses, telephone numbers, next of kin, emergency contacts, etc.
- Discuss how we will communicate while I am away.
- Give suggestions for talking to my children about my absence and my return.
- Give suggestions for answering my children's questions about my mission.

WITH MY CHILDREN, I:

- Talk about who will care for them while I am away.
- Discuss childcare plans, routines, and rules to keep them on track while I am away.
- Talk about how and when they will go to their new home.
- Plan which toys, clothes, and other items they can take.
